How to Avoid a Judgment Day Surprise

September 8, 2020 by Jack Wilkie
One of the most sobering passages in all of Scripture comes in Matthew 7:21-23. As Jesus wrapped up the Sermon on the Mount, He pointed out that there will be many (not just a few, not just some) who will get to the Judgment, think they’re on their way in, and be turned away at the door.

I desperately do not want to be in that “many.” I think it’s fair to assume you don’t want to be, either. How do we stay out of that group, then?

The first step is to read the verse with this realization: “He could be talking about me.” The people Jesus will condemn in this section are quite clearly those who will never see it coming. They are people who will call Jesus “Lord, Lord,” which tells us He wasn’t talking about the world, i.e. those who never claimed Him. They are also people who can point to things they did in His name – prophesying, casting out demons, performing miracles – which tells us He wasn’t talking about nominal Christians whose religion doesn’t affect their life at all.
If you’ve heard much preaching in the churches of Christ, you may have heard this verse explained as being about the denominational world, that they claim Jesus as Lord but haven’t obeyed Him on certain doctrinal points and haven’t “done the will of My Father who is in heaven.” While I don’t mean to downplay doctrine, I don’t believe that’s what Jesus had in mind, either, as we’ll cover in the next point. Ironically, it’s that very kind of thinking that could put us in position for a Judgment Day surprise. “Lord, Lord, didn’t we worship a capella, and didn’t we take communion every Sunday, and didn’t we have male leadership?” That’s precisely why they’ll be caught off guard: they were so confident in their external performance that they didn’t consider they might be missing the point.

The second step is to understand the kind of person Jesus has in mind. In the broader context, we find ourselves at the conclusion of the Sermon on the Mount. Starting in 7:13, Jesus began His conclusion by painting the picture of two paths; the broad, and the narrow. He then went on to talk about those who
