And surely, I am with you always, to the very end of the age.”

Wrong Conclusions

Wrong Conclusion #2 (continued from last week)

Instead of seeing that the God of the Israelites is greater than Dagon, the priests and all the people who entered Dagon’s temple at Ashdod concluded that they should never again step on the threshold of the temple. Why? Because that’s where Dagon’s head and arms landed when they had broken off! Even when the Lord’s hand was heavy against the Philistines, they never came to any other conclusion than to send the Ark back to Israel ... and to never again step on the threshold of the temple. It never seemed to occur to them to conclude that the Lord was God and that they should serve Him instead of Dagon. God has placed before us clear evidence that He is God and what He expects of us as people who believe in Him. And yet, much like the people in this story, we, too, sometimes choose to reduce God down to something we can see and feel, and to content ourselves with silly superstitions and empty traditions. It seems the natural thing to do. It’s what everybody around us does. It’s what we’ve always done. It takes no courage. You don’t even have to think about it.

But God has called us to rise above the world (Psalms 20:7-8), to walk by faith and not by sight (2 Corinthians 5:7), and to think outside of the box of worldly restrictions (Romans 8:5-8). Christians aren’t allowed to conform (Romans 12:2) or to drift (Hebrews 2:1). Christians are called to see with the eyes of faith the extraordinary, the unconventional, even the impossible. Through faith we can turn loose of those gods of ours that we have to mold and repair (like Dagon) and can allow the Lord God Almighty to mold and repair us into His own likeness (like the men and women of Hebrews 11).

The facts are before us. Making wrong conclusions will lead to superstitions and restrictions. But the right conclusions will open us up to the awesome possibilities of God.
